

E&E NEWS

Over the years, we've fielded reader requests for opportunities to hear directly from our reporters about issues they cover, but we've never had the bandwidth to make that happen.

Now we have bandwidth.

On Oct. 13, we'll host our first-ever E&E News briefing.

In the spotlight: EPA. The agency suffered a brain drain over the last few years and is now tasked with carrying out an ambitious Biden administration agenda on environmental justice, public health, and climate change.

Our EPA reporting team -- Kevin Bogardus, Ev Crunden, Hannah Northey, Sean Reilly and Ariel Wittenberg -- will discuss what's happening at the agency and answer your questions in the online gathering.

We plan to do these forums regularly on a wide range of topics.

In November, we'll feature our international climate reporters, Jean Chemnick and Sara Schonhardt. They'll be in Glasgow to cover COP 26 and will share their insights with you as a part of a series of events we have lined up for the occasion. Look for details on that soon.

Finally, I want to thank you for staying with us in this year of change. We have a new look and new colleagues, but we're still the same E&E News. We are still providing the comprehensive and compelling coverage of energy and the environment that you've counted on for the past 20 years. That is not going to change.

Sincerely yours,
Cy Zaneski
